Low-cost programs

Have you been thinking about studying abroad but are concerned that it is too expensive? It may be far more affordable than you think. No matter how tight your budget, by choosing the right program and using all of the resources available, you can afford to study abroad.

If you are overwhelmed and not sure where to start, AIFS is here to help. We are providing you with this information to help guide you. Please take a few moments to read through it; the pages that follow will simplify the process of financing your study abroad experience.

Important Things to Consider

Academic Planning

The importance of getting an early start on planning your study abroad experience is essential. Working with your academic advisor to discuss the courses you can take while studying abroad will help ensure the credits you earn will count toward your degree.

Semester vs. Short-Term Study Abroad

You may think a full semester abroad will automatically be more expensive than a summer option because of the program length and corresponding fee. However, if you plan well your semester abroad can replace a semester on your home campus. The courses you take, whether they are courses in your major, general degree requirements or electives should keep you on track to graduate on time. Your semester abroad need not be at an additional cost. Keep in mind that financial aid and loans are more readily available to you during the academic year. Semester study abroad also allows you to work during the summer and save toward your educational costs.

On the other hand, short-term study abroad, whether it is a summer, January or inter-term program, may present a better opportunity for you to study abroad. Your major may make it difficult to stay on course to graduate on time if you try to study abroad for a full semester. A short-term program may also offer a specific academic focus that directly supports your major. These opportunities do cost less than semester-long study abroad, simply by virtue of their shorter duration. With many calendar options available, you may also be able find an inter-term opportunity that will still allow you to work during the summer.

The most important decision is that you go! Regardless of program length your study abroad experience will set you apart from the crowd. Only a fraction of U.S. college students study abroad for academic credit. Be sure to be one of them!

Home School Tuition and Fees

As you look at study abroad program options and costs, consider what you are currently paying at your home institution. If you attend a private college or are an out-of-state student at a public university, you may well be paying considerably more per semester than you would pay for a semester-long study abroad program.

If you are an in-state student at a public institution, in many cases the cost of a study abroad program is comparable, when you consider tuition and fees, housing, meals and other expenses. Consider commuting costs, along with out of pocket personal expenses you incur while attending your home institution and any gap that exists shrinks further.

Federal Financial Aid and Loans

If you are eligible for Federal Financial Aid and/or loans these funds should be yours to use on your study abroad program. If the academic credit you will earn abroad is approved by your home institution your financial aid is available to you. AIFS will work together with you and your study abroad and financial aid offices to help facilitate the use of these funds.

Home Institution or Private Source Grants and Scholarships

Scholarships or grants that you receive from your home institution may be available to you to use on a study abroad program. However, often times these funds are only available if you participate on a program run by your home institution. You should discuss the availability of institutional aid with your financial aid office. Grants or scholarships that you receive from sources other than your home school can often be used for study abroad. Check with the source of those funds to inquire about eligibility.

Creative Fundraising

In addition to loans and scholarships, there are several ways for students to fund their time abroad. Below is a list of some basic activities to get started.

Letter writing campaign

- Reach out to companies and organizations you would like to potentially work for and explain how this experience would be of benefit to them
- Family and extended family
- Co-workers
- Family co-workers
- Church
- Social organizations (4-H, Kiwanis, Rotary, etc)
- Greek organizations
- Students on your campus
- Friends at other universities

Lifestyle

- “Keep the change” savings accounts that round up to the nearest dollar on your purchases and put funds directly into a separate savings account
- Review and alter your daily spending habits to find ways to cut back on your discretionary spending
- Ask families to give you money or travel-related gifts for holidays and birthdays
- Consider a part-time job

Crowdfunding

One of the most popular and creative fundraising ideas currently is crowdfunding, which is the practice of raising small money from numerous people to fund a project (in this case study abroad). Previous AIFS students have found success from this practice and have raised thousands of dollars toward their program fees. Most sites charge either a per-donation or one-time fee for using their service and students should research the crowdsourcing platforms available online to determine which site best suits their needs. Once you have a personalized crowdfunding website you should share the link on your social media platforms to spread the word and consider getting business cards made that you can pass out to everyone. Strangers are often willing to donate to your cause if you have a compelling story and are only asking for $2. Keep in mind that every dollar counts.

Why AIFS?

With the ever-rising cost of higher education, it is no surprise that students are concerned about how to pay for study abroad. Choosing the program that is right for you academically and financially is essential. In addition to comparing program prices it is equally important to compare what is included in the program fee.

For more than fifty years AIFS has provided college students with study abroad programs of the highest quality that include everything you need. We will help you plan your experience every step of the way. AIFS Study Abroad programs include:

- Academic program
